===== The example database below contains three separate entries in the "Natural Products" section that were provided by the supplier (EtOAc) of a reported anticancer compound (Fig. 4.1{ref-type="fig"}). One of the compounds (a) is a virus, while the remaining two compounds (b and c) are antibiotic. The attribute information for a is shown in Fig. 4.1{ref-type="fig"}, which contains several tags. Fig. 4.1 Example of the attachment file to the database. Another example of a compound with the attribute information attached is shown below in Fig. 4.2{ref-type="fig"}. This compound can be attached as XML data through the "att_ex" mechanism. Fig. 4.2 Example of an attachment to the database. Natural Products in the Database {#Sec2} ----- The schema below is for the natural products section of the database. Only a simplified version is shown here, with the class "natural-product-attributes", attribute "name", and the properties "unit-of-measure" and "quantity". The class "attribute" itself has the property "attribute-type", which can have the values "codename", "attribute-description", or "attribute-name". The class "collection" has the properties "collection-attribute" and "attribute-name", and the collections also have the property "name". The names for the attributes are not unique: the attribute "name" is in fact a compound name, which can contain multiple values, separated by commas. The attribute names are thus represented as a list of values. Note that there is no direct connection between the attribute names and the compound names that are in the database. This has only been done in this example for simplicity. The term "codename" is a term that is used by the supplier to refer to any particular attribute name. Since the data format for the attribute names is a list of values that

Marijuana Laws Marijuana is the most common illegal drug (after alcohol) in Colorado. However, marijuana possession is not a federal crime and possession of a small amount of marijuana by an adult person is not illegal under federal law, but the federal government does have the right to enforce marijuana law in states that have legal marijuana. Marijuana possession can be a crime in Colorado. The penalties for marijuana offenses are the same as those for the most severe drug crimes, including felony possession of a firearm. Punishments for marijuana crimes can be harsh. In 2011, the state of Colorado adopted laws prohibiting the possession, manufacture, and distribution of marijuana in the state. Since that time, it has been illegal to possess, grow, or distribute pot within the state. While marijuana use is illegal in Colorado, the state does not prohibit the consumption of alcohol by an adult. Alcohol can be consumed while driving, at school, at work, in bars, or at home.

You can also drink alcohol in a restaurant or bar where you have legal access to alcohol. Colorado criminalizes many acts that do not require any proof of intent or mens rea. This means that it is illegal to break into a house, even if no one was home, and it is illegal to shoot an arrow at a target, even if you did not intend to hit anyone. It is not illegal to have sex with anyone, even an unconscious person. People are not necessarily guilty for things they do not even know are illegal. In Colorado it is often illegal to commit "malicious mischief" or "terrorize." Most rules of conduct in Colorado are
